Dixie and the Low Peck Hen

For those of us who were raised on a farm or who currently own chickens, understanding the plight of the “low-peck hen” is almost common knowledge. For those unfamiliar with the social order of chickens, let me explain. Within every flock of chickens there is a “pecking” order. The pecking order starts with the highest chicken that can peck everyone below her but no one pecks her. The order descends, by order of the next chicken, to the lowest hen that everyone can peck on but since she is the lowest hen, she has no one to peck on.

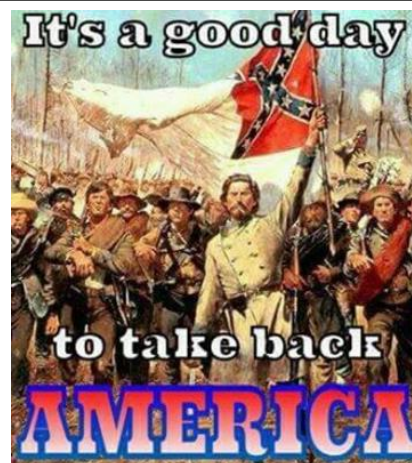

While watching my chickens I noticed how my low-peck hen, while minding her own business and not bothering anyone, was brutally attacked by one of her “superiors.” As I watched this little act of chicken society work itself out, I could not help but feel sorry for the chicken being attacked but I was also painfully reminded that, as a member of a defeated and occupied nation (Confederate States of America), I too was a low-peck hen! Consider the South back in the summer of 2015, minding its own business and not harming anyone, when a deranged youth in Charleston, S.C. committed what everyone considered a horrible act: Like my little low peck hen, the South and all things Confederate instantly was brutally attacked. The distasteful reality is that the defeated and the occupied South exist so as to provide America with its low peck hen. Many times I have heard fellow Confederates question the rationale of Yankees forcing Southerners to remain in the Federal government “if they hate us so much.” As every empire understands, it can be very politically useful to have a defeated and occupied people to kick around from time to time.

Unfortunately, most Southerners today are blind to the misuse and mistreatment of Southerners by the victorious Yankee. For the past 150 years the South has been America’s low-peck hen. Modern Southerners cannot imagine any other existence for the South other than that of America’s low-peck hen! After all, “it’s always been like this.” No my fellow Southerners it has not always been like “this.” Only after Appomattox and the defeat of the real American republic of republics by the Federal Empire has it been like “this.” My poor mistreated low-peck hen has it better than we Southerners, at least her children will not inherit her status, but the children of the South will always be the Federal Empire’s low-peck hen. That is—unless we decide to do something about it!

Uncle Seth knew that the War was not over—it is not over until Freedom is won! He uses true stories to educate his grandchildren—to help them understand that just like the Irish, the struggle for Freedom must continue regardless of how long it takes. Deo Vindice!

Sharecroppers in India—Peasants Defeat an Empire

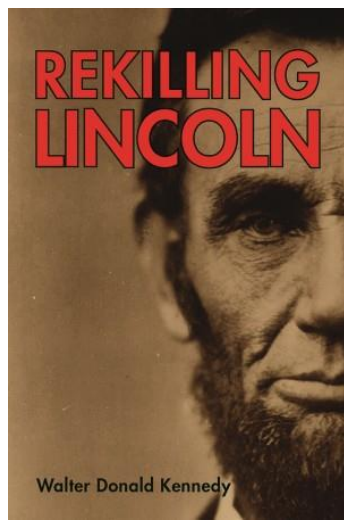

The British Empire was enforcing a system of sharecropping in India at the beginning of the 20th century. The poor people of India were forced by law to plant a certain portion of their crops in indigo and give it to the landlords as rent payment. It was observed that Southern sharecroppers were working with implements as crude as those used in India. But the peasants of India rose up against their landlords and the British Empire. They won a significant victory. Southern sharecropping would last past the ending of WW II, but not India. The reason is that the peasants of India had a leader (Mahatma Gandhi) who did not accept British rule as legitimate. He was the leader of India’s nonviolent revolution. He took on the cause of the oppressed sharecroppers and eventually won a major victory. His efforts forced the landlords to relent in their harsh rents and to eventually allow the peasants to purchase land.

Will We Be Better Off With A New President?

With many Southerners excited about the prospect of electing a new President and putting the Obama era behind us—perhaps we should stop and ask what we expect from the new president. If the Democrats win, then our condition may be even more dire. If the Republican establishment wins, then the generalized anger may be less but the possibility of regaining the right of local self-government and the ability of we the people to control the federal government will not become reality—at least not due to the efforts of the political establishment.

Many Southerners are putting their hope in one of the Republican non-establishment candidates. But as we noted in Why Not Freedom, even President Ronald Reagan was not able to reduce the size of the Federal Government or eliminate even one government department. If the most conservative candidate is elected, he will be opposed by an in place establishment. While important it will take more than presidential elections.

The truth that liberals and establishment conservatives do not want known! America’s “greatest” president actually destroyed the constitutional Republic!

Nullification and secession provide means to escape oppression. The mere presence of these weapons produce the same effect on tyrants as an armed citizen has on criminals. Reclaiming Liberty

Real States' Rights Requires the Right Amendment

Not just any amendment but the right one is necessary to restore local self-government via real states' rights. A draft amendment that would accomplish this is in the books below.

Dr. Thomas Sowell Endorses Call for Convention of States to Limit Federal Government

The Kennedy Twins began this newsletter with a call for Southerners to become the catalyst for the reclaiming real states' rights. Vision 2020: http://www.kennedytwins.com/newsletter_apr15.pdf We noted that this could be done by establishing a ballot initiative in 2020 calling for an amendment acknowledging the right of nullification and secession. A key part of this is the fact that “we the people” cannot rely upon “our” federal government to limit itself. Therefore, we must use our states to call for a constitutional convention for the specific purpose of submitting to the states an amendment acknowledging real states' rights.

In Nullification: Why and How we describe the folly of relying on traditional elections, politicians, and the general “conservative” establishment. We detail how a small group could use “unconventional” political warfare to do an “end run” around the much larger political status quo. What we are trying to do is to get “we the people” of Dixie to rise up and demand a return to America’s constitutionally limited Republic of Republics as envisioned by America’s Founding Fathers. For generations Southerners have joked that the South shall rise again—well now it is time to do it!

Some folks have accused the Kennedy Twins of being too “militant” and “extreme” but recently Dr. Sowell added his name to those who are calling for a convention of the states to formulate an amendment to reclaim liberty. Remember they accused Patrick Henry of treason! See Dr. Sowell column at:

A Nation's Struggle to be Free [1 of 6]

[The following six issues will carry a review of people living in an occupied nation and their efforts to remove their nation from the grip of an oppressive empire. The series will begin with India's struggle against the British Empire and continue each issue covering the nations/people of Ireland, Scotland, Quebec, Lithuania, and the South.]

India: Non Violent Civil Disobedience vs. an Empire

The British Empire kept India as one of its foreign possession for two hundred years. The people of India were under British rule from 1757 – 1858 (India Company) and 1858 – 1947 (British Raj). Numerous revolts occurred during that time but the Empire was forced to yield independence after years of nonviolent civil disobedience under the leadership of a non-politician Mahatma Gandhi. The British were experts in maintaining control by using the divisions between the native population and playing one group off against the other—a system referred to as “divide and rule.” Gandhi countered the British use of hate and greed that kept the people of India divided and weak with a call for understanding between the people and devotion to the occupied nation. It was said that Gandhi “made humility and simple truth more powerful than empires;” and that “he kept his hands clean in the midst of battle. He fought without malice or falsehood or hate.” He condemned inaction but warned his followers not to be overly concerned about immediate results declaring “He who is ever brooding over results often loses nerve in the performance of duty. He becomes impatient and then gives vent to anger and begins to do unworthy things...resorting to means fair and foul to attain his end.” He was a man of action who renounced the fruits of his victories—a truly remarkable leader of the people.

He stressed that opponents must be “weaned from error by patience and sympathy. You cannot inject new ideas into a man's head by chopping it off...acts of violence create bitterness in the survivors and brutality in the destroyers.” He admitted that perhaps many of the British thought that their rule was best for India but he reminded them that “a bad government of our own design is better that a good one forced upon us.” He noted that two centuries of submission to foreign rule “have emasculated the people and induced them to the habit of simulation.” (To give the false appearance of accepting foreign rule.) The people were under the rule of foreigners who did not understand the people of India but to survive the people were forced to pretend that they were loyal British subjects; to accept their assigned position as a people who were inferior to their conquerors; and a people who did not deserve to be the master in their own home. But that changed once the people were awoken to their natural right to be free. Gandhi's weapon was formed by awakening in the hearts of his people the knowledge that they too had a natural right to live under a government ordered upon the free and unfettered will of the people of India.

By 1930 the people of India no longer automatically obeyed the rulings of the Empire. Docile submission to British rule had become a thing of the past. The slow change in the heart and mind of individual Indians was not even recognized by the people themselves. It was scarcely noticed by outsiders but Indians had become free. Even though they still wore the chains of political slavery—they were free—because their spirits had escaped from the British enforced mental prison. Gandhi had forged the key and had released the doors to their prison. His biographer noted “No general directing armies against an enemy ever moved with more skill than the saint armed with righteousness as his shield and a moral cause as his spear.”

In the last article in this series (number 6) we will discuss what lessons can be learned from these various struggles for independence and how these lessons could be applied to the occupied nation the C.S.A.

Tylenol, Blue Bell and Muslims

Reconstruction Then and Now

As tragic as the defeat of the South is, Reconstruction added even more misery to our defeated nation. Shortly after the defeat of the South, Confederate Vice President Alexander Stephens noted that with the South's defeat Americans would one day awake to the fact that the "cause of the South is the cause of all." Reconstruction, although aimed at the South, has proven to be just as harmful to all Americans, not just Southerners—V.P. Stephens was right! Reconstruction and its aftermath will be the subject of an upcoming Stephen D. Lee Institute lectures in Columbia, South Carolina February 5-6.

The speakers in Columbia will be: Jeffery Addicott, TX; Earl Ijames, NC; the Kennedy Twins, LA; Donald Livingston, SC; Egon Tausch, NC. For many years the Stephen D. Lee Institute has led the way in promoting a deeper understanding of why the South was right in 1861. As the subject of Southern Rights is examined by these types of organizations, our enemies are put on the defensive. The Kennedy Twins encourage everyone to take advantage of the lectures offered by the Stephen D. Lee Institute. Come to Columbia February 5-6 and visit with us, all the other speakers, and fellow Un-Reconstructed Confederates. For more information, visit their web site at www.stephendleeinstitute.com

General Stephen D. Lee charged the Sons of Confederate Veterans to "vindicate" the Cause for which our Confederate ancestors fought. The Cause was Freedom protected by real States' Rights. We are duty bound to vindicate the Cause!

For the devotees of Blue Bell ice cream, the summer of 2015 will go down as one long disappointing never ending search for a bowl of good ice cream. After it was discovered that at least two deaths and many cases of grave illness were associated with Blue Bell ice cream contaminated with listeria, Blue Bell plants were shut down and all Blue Bell ice cream was recalled. As everyone understood, the vast amount of this ice cream was perfectly safe for human consumption but due to overriding common sense and prudent management, this product was pulled from the market. Several years earlier a similar scare took place when several poison-laced Tylenol were found in a few bottles of Tylenol. Just as in the case of Blue Bell ice cream, common sense and prudent management dictated the removal of ALL products until the public could be assured that the product no longer posed a danger to the general public.

Strange is it not that when dealing with contaminated ice cream and pain killers, common sense was common! But that which is common for "we the people" is very uncommon in the Federal government. Today the Federal Empire is forcing the citizens of the United States to accommodate Muslim refugees even though there is no way to determine if these refugees are terrorist enemy agents attempting to infiltrate the U.S. Many states have attempted to prohibit the settlement of these Muslims, only to be told by Big Brother, aka, the Federal government, "do as we tell you, or else!" Big Brother tells us that these Muslims are peace loving women and children and only bigots and ignorant people would try to block the Federal government's work of mercy. As the recent events in California demonstrate, not all Muslim women are peaceful and even children can be use by radical degenerates to attack their enemies. Strange is it not that Obama demands background checks on law abiding Americans exercising their Second Amendment right of gun ownership but Muslims must be allowed into the U.S. even though background checks are impossible!

At this point Southerners should stop and ask themselves: Would forced Muslim resettlement in my state be possible if the South had won the War for Southern Independence? Today the Federal Empire dictates to "we the people" of once sovereign states. Forced Muslim resettlement is just one more factor that points out that in 1861 and today, The South Was Right! Vison 2020!

Berlin - A man who tried to attack a Paris police station last week had lived in a center for asylum seekers in Germany. Terrorist Walid Salih, who was shot dead attacking a police station in Paris, had been arrested in 2014 for sexual assault in Cologne, Germany. This demonstrates the dangers inherent danger of open borders. But it can get worse, for example; "In Rotterdam two fathers tried to get gang members who raped their daughters arrested for their crimes and the police arrested the fathers for hate speech." This is what happens when we allow progressives and secular humanists run "our" government. Either we take control of our states or else learn to be docile supplicants to our progressive masters. Vison for Southern Freedom in 2020 or slavery!
