President Trump or President Clinton: It Will Not Matter

The South Will Still Be an Invaded and Occupied Nation

No doubt there are a lot of Southern conservatives who are counting on a President Trump to save-the-day for conservative values. And we have to admit that a President Trump would certainly be better than the past seven years of the Obama regime. And no doubt it would be better than a Hillary Clinton presidency. But it is important for Southern conservatives to remember what has brought us to this moment of supreme federal tyranny. It was not President Obama who created the system of ruling elites in Washington, D.C. with their crony capitalists "donor class" supporters on Wall Street and K-Street. It was not President Obama who created a supreme federal government that is the sole judge of its powers and actions. The current bloated, tax, borrow, inflate, & spend Federal Empire was put in place by Lincoln and the Republican Party during Reconstruction. We the people of the states no longer have an effective means to control the federal government—no means to force it to comply with the limitations place upon it by the Constitution. The original bulwark against centralized tyranny, states' rights, inclusive of nullification and secession, was destroyed by massed bloody Yankee bayonets. And remember it was Southern blood on those bayonets! States' rights no longer exist. Today we "enjoy" only states' privileges. These privileges are allowed only if they do not conflict with the secular humanist, socialist agenda endorsed and promoted by the Federal Empire and their lackeys in the media, academia, and Hollywood.

A Trump presidency would buy time for Southern conservatives to establish a viable movement such as our proposed Vision 2020. See pages 8-10 March newsletter re Project 2020: http://www.kennedytwins.com/newsletter_mar16.pdf. This would allow we the people an opportunity to vote on remaining in the Federal Empire or establish a constitutionally limited republic of republics enforced by real states' rights. But a Clinton victory would require surrender or immediate action to place a ballot initiative before the people allowing for a Dix-exit vote—leaving the Federal Empire and reclaiming our original constitutionally limited republic of republics. Time is running out—our choice is to remain docile subjects to the secular humanist Federal Empire or demand a return to real American liberty.

States' Rights, the Weather and the GOP

As is often stated, "Everyone talks about the weather but no one does anything about it." With another Republican Convention monopolizing the airwaves of the United States, it seems like everyone wants to "stand up" for states' rights. Even Paul Ryan came close to defending the phrase "states' rights" when he condemned the "runaway" and all powerful Federal government. But, just like the weather, talking and doing are two different things.

When establishment conservatives need to ingratiate themselves with "we the people" at the local level, one can be sure they will start talking about their belief in and defense of states' rights. But ask them what right can a state exercise today that cannot be nullified by an imperial and all-powerful Federal government and watch them go blank. Establishment politicians and neo-conservatives do not believe in real states' rights, after all, they are devotees or better yet, sycophants, of Abraham Lincoln who gave America a war upon states' rights. After Lincoln it is not the states that are sovereign but the Federal government; therefore, states do not have rights, they only can do that which the Federal government allows them to do. Sovereign states, such as the states that empowered the Federal government by ratifying the Constitution possessed REAL states' rights. With real states' rights the Federal government could be forced to abide by the Constitution but today states do not have rights, they only have privileges which can be taken from them by their master, the Federal Empire. Don't be fooled by the empty ranting of establishment politicians or any neo-conservative talking head. Without the acknowledged right of nullification, interposition, and secession, the Federal Empire will continue its role as the ultimate tyrant of the American people in general but most importantly, the people of the defeated and occupied Confederate States of America.

One of the first and a bestselling book about the South's defense of real states' rights. Without real states we the people have no way to defend our rights when those rights are oppressed by an unconstitutional federal government. The South was right because liberty was right in 1776, 1861 & today!

Southern Baptist Leadership and Bearing False Witness

“The ninth commandment concerns our own and our neighbor’s good name. This forbids speaking falsely on any matter, lying, equivocating, and any way devising or designing to deceive our neighbor. Speaking unjustly against our neighbor, to hurt his reputation. Bearing false witness against him, or in common conversation slandering, backbiting, and tale-bearing; making what is done amiss, worse than it is, and in any way endeavoring to raise our reputation upon the ruin of our neighbor’s.” Mathew Henry’s Commentary on Exodus 20:16. <http://biblehub.com/exodus/20-16.htm>

According to Mathew Henry, a well-respected Biblical scholar, “slandering, backbiting, and tale-bearing,” is an abridgement of the Ninth Commandment. Nevertheless, it seems that the leadership of the Southern Baptist Convention (SBC) was more than ready to set aside that Commandment in order to pursue its left-of-center politically correct agenda of anti-South cultural cleansing. By now, most good Southerners are aware of the SBC’s spurious denunciation of the Confederate Flag. These same Southerners should also understand that the leadership of the SBC is running far to the left of the rank and file of Southern Baptists; and that leadership must be called into account or the SBC will continue down the well-trodden road of apostasy traveled by other mainstream denominations who now are ordaining homosexual bishops and allowing a Muslim cleric to open their general convention with a prayer to Allah.

Approximately 55 years ago Ron and I were members of the Intermediate Sunday School class at Pearl Valley Baptist Church in Mississippi (a SBC church). Our Intermediate Sunday School Quarterly, published by the SBC, had a wonderful photo of General Robert E. Lee on the back of the Quarterly. The following quote from General Lee was under his photo: “Duty then is the most sublime word in the English language. Do your duty in all things you cannot do more, one should never wish to do less.” Yes, we have indeed come a long way!

The Baptist leadership who engage in bearing false witness against Southerners who wish only to honor their ancestors (5th Commandment) and are faithful Christians, should understand that their decision can have some very dangerous consequences. For example, as seen in Dallas and Baton Rouge recently, when a “false witness” is spread about people, in this case, police, their lives are put in danger. Today, any hate-filled thug seeking to punish a Southerner for the “sin” of slavery and racism will now feel free to harm anyone seen holding a Confederate Flag; after all, even the SOUTHERN Baptist Convention said (or this is how it will be interpreted) only racists carry that flag. The truth about what that flag means and what the good Christians of the South believe about their heritage and freedom, will have fallen victim to a Nazi like “Big Lie” that is told and reinforced by left of center commentators and the leadership of the Southern Baptist Convention.

Our Confederate ancestors fought to maintain liberty via a constitutionally limited federal government enforced by real states’ rights. They knew that they were fighting a battle against a money worshiping, power hungry elite who wanted to use the power of the federal government to force the Southern minority to accept their non-Christian world view of power and commerce.

Southern Baptist and other Christians should read Nullifying Tyranny: Creating Moral Communities in an Immoral World to learn that Christian morality cannot be “normal” and accepted in a nation ruled by a centralized federal government controlled by secular humanists.

Uncle Seth Fought the Yankees by James Ronald Kennedy

The Deadly Struggle Between Former Classmates

Uncle Seth relished the warm rays of the early morning May sun on his face. He and the boys were up early just to watch the sun come up over the distant stand of red oaks and pine trees and counting the number of times their red rooster would welcome the new day with his lusty crow. “Uncle Seth,” announced his great grandson Curtis, “you going to church today?”

“It would take about 20,000 Yankees to keep me from going to church on a beautiful Sunday morning in May,” replied Uncle Seth with a low laugh that hinted to the boys that Uncle Seth had a story to tell them about a particular Sunday during the War. The boys hushed their chatter and turned their eager eyes toward the old Confederate soldier.

“It was on a Sunday morning in May of 1863 that Lee was busy giving the Yankee invaders a thorough thrashing at Chancellorsville and I, along with about 3,000 tired Alabamians, was asked to do the impossible—we were told that we were to defend General Lee’s Army against an attack of 20,000 well-fed, well-equipped, and rested Yankees. Now boys, us Johnny Rebs were accustomed to being asked to do the impossible, and it had become the expected thing for us to do just that—you know the impossible! But defeating a well-equipped army that outnumbered us better than six to one was stretching it a bit for even ole Johnny Reb,” Uncle Seth paused for a moment to make sure his words were having the appropriate impact on his young audience. “U.S. General Sedgewick had crossed the Rappahannock River with 20,000 men intent upon falling on the rear of General Lee’s Army. If that had happened, our army would have been destroyed. I was attached to a group of Alabamians commanded by General C. M. Wilcox. General Wilcox had attended West Point with Union General Sedgewick. So here we were with less than 3,000 Alabama boys facing General Wilcox’s old schoolmate, U.S. General Sedgewick, who had over 20,000 Yankees troops under his command. General Sedgewick was ready to order his well-equipped Yanks to charge over us and into General Lee’s unprotected rear positions. Against this hoard of Yankee invaders, it would seem worse than folly—even suicidal—to make any show of resistance. But the gallant Wilcox understood the gravity of the situation and had confidence in his soldiers’ unfaltering devotion to the cause of Southern independence. He knew that we would turn back the hated invader or die in the effort. He ordered us to form up at Salem Church, a brick church about four miles west of Fredericksburg, Virginia, on the south side of a plank road. Several of our sharpshooters posted themselves in the large oaks in the churchyard. The rest of us lay in an ordered, military formation on the ground waiting for the arrival of our blue-coated guests. Around 4 p.m. a magnificent scene appeared in the open field beyond the skirt of timber in our front. Up the gentle slope in front of us, we saw the dense columns of blue invaders marching with steady tread, United States flag and banners flying and shining steel bayonets glimmering in the warm sunlight. This array of invaders was organized three columns deep—you know, one behind the other—as they unknowingly marched toward our small band of Southern warriors,” Uncle Seth paused to allow the boys to feel for themselves a small portion of the anxiety of an approaching battle.

“General Wilcox had ordered us to keep down on the ground and not to fire until we could look into the invader’s eyes. They could not see us because we were down on the ground instead of standing in the usual shoulder-to-shoulder massed ranks that was used in most of our fighting—General Wilcox knew that would be what the Yankees would be expecting to see. When the Yanks were within twenty yards of us we rose up and poured a deadly hailstorm of lead into their massed columns. Our fire was so accurate and destructive that the Yankees were unable to even return our initial fire. The first column of invaders just disappeared! The second column advanced with a still unbroken front and met with a fate similar to the first. The third column then advanced and met the same fate. As we poured minie-ball after minie-ball into the depleted Yankee ranks our battle line bounded forward shouting, as if with one voice, the famous Rebel Yell. The momentum of our charge and the effect of our minie-balls swept the entire Yankee Army from the field of battle, killing, wounding, and capturing thousands of the invaders. That night the United States Army commanded by General Sedgewick recrossed the Rappahannock River and General Lee’s Army was no longer threatened from this quarter,” Uncle Seth explained. (continued on 8 page)

Scotland the Brave: The Struggle for an Independent Scotland

The people of Scotland speak the same language as the people of England but with a distinctively unique accent. Their sons have served honorably in the British military. Scotland was a major partner in the United Kingdom's military struggles during both World War I and II. Yet Scotland has a history of English invasion, conquest, and occupation—a history of rebels fighting centralized authority in faraway London. A history of a nation composing a minority in the British Empire and a history of men such as William Wallace and Robert the Bruce who were leaders in the struggle against the central government in London. For over 300 years Scottish nationalists have struggled to reverse the 1707 “Union” with England. Today that struggle continues as a political struggle.

In 1853 the Scots demand Home Rule but the British majority refused; in 1885 they proposed a “federalism” system that would allow internal public policy to be totally controlled by Scotland but the British majority refused; in 1913 a Home Rule Bill was submitted to the British Parliament but it failed; in 1930 a petition signed by 20% of the Scottish population calling for Home Rule was presented but ignored in the English Parliament. The Scots were facing the seemingly impossible situation of a minority demanding their rights while being ruled by an unfriendly majority. All the British rejections of Home Rule was done in the most “democratic” manner but it amounted to tyranny none-the-less. In America of the 1840s John C. Calhoun warned against the tyranny of king numbers by which a “democratic” majority could oppress the minority and it would all be done under the pretext of “democracy.”

The modern era of Scottish independence began in 1967 with the founding of the Scottish National Party (SNP). Large deposits of oil had been discovered in the North Sea but the major benefactor was not Scotland but England. Economics became the main issue that forced the average person to consider the benefit of Scottish Independence. The SNP based its core support on those who had a strong attachment to Scottish Heritage but it moved beyond those to capture a significant portion of the general population—folks who were basically aware of their Scottish Heritage but did not make a political connection between Scottish Heritage and Scottish politics. It was economics that drove the steady increase in the general acceptance of the idea of Scottish nationalism. In 2014 the SNP, which had been an insignificant political party in the 1960-70s garnered 45% of the vote in favor of Scottish independence. To prevent the SNP from winning the vote for independence the English Parliament was forced to grant major concessions to the Scottish nationalists. Even though they did not win the vote for independence the SNP was able to extract concession from the central government and also establish the idea of Scottish independence as an acceptable political alternative.

In 2016 while England voted to leave the European Union Scotland voted to remain by a majority of around 63%. The vote was driven by economics. And once again the interest of Scotland is held hostage to the majority vote in England. Today there is a new demand for yet another vote on Scottish Independence. We may yet see an independent Scotland—independence won via non-violent political efforts. (5th of 6 articles re nonviolent secession movements worldwide)

“Uncle Seth,” inquired Curtis, “you mean the two generals knew each other and went to school together?” “Yes, that’s right, but I tell you that there was an even more tragic encounter during that battle,” Uncle Seth responded in a voice that seemed laden with a note of sadness. “During the first part of the battle, I was standing close to Captain John B. Rains who was patting me on the back and encouraging me to keep up my accurate firing. Suddenly a Yankee officer, mounted on a fine, swift horse came charging along the Yankee lines. His intention was to rally his disorganized and retreating troops and lead them in a charge against us. I think he realized just how thin our defensive line was and thought that a spirited charge would be able to overwhelm us and turn the tide of battle in their favor. Many a battle has been won by the decisive and gallant initiative of line officers during the hell of battle.” The boys notice a hint of respect for the hated enemy in the old soldier’s voice. The old Confederate soldier suddenly added strength to his voice as he straightens himself into a proper military bearing, or at least as much as his aged body would allow, as he continued with his story.

“I called out to the boys to ‘shoot the man on the horse before he rallies his men.’ Our Captain ordered us to ‘right oblique,’ which meant that the entire rank was to aim at the target on our right and fire. That gallant fellow reeled and fell dead—a corpse on the plank road. After the battle the Captain and several of us went over to check on the fallen Yankee officer. When we rolled him over, Captain Rains gasped, ‘Oh my God! I have killed my school chum!’ It seems that the Yankee officer was a friend and former classmate of Captain Rains. Captain Rains and the Yankee captain had both attended Philadelphia Law School before the war. I tell you boys, I was glad that none of us knew exactly which one of us had fired the fatal shot. It’s strange that during the heat of battle you never have time to think about the men who are trying to kill you before you kill them. But after it’s all over your mind keeps asking ‘was it worth it?’ I suspect it’s easier to answer yes to such questions when you are fighting on your own land and defending your home and family from the invader’s torch. I just will never understand how those boys in blue could so easily be tricked by Yankee politicians into expending their lives in order to maintain the Federal Empire,” with these words Uncle Seth added the benediction to his Sunday morning story.

The book cover shows two soldiers

- One fighting to protect his family
- One coming as an invader

The book cover shows two flags

- One represents a people who ask to live in a country based upon the American principle of the consent of the governed
- One represents a people intent upon forcing their smaller neighbor to remain in a union that extracts tribute from the smaller nation for the benefit of the larger nation

The book cover represents two contending ideas

- Government must protect the nation’s border, individual liberty and leave the people alone
- Government is supreme and may use its power to establish a national and eventually international financial, commercial and military empire for the benefit of the ruling elite and their crony capitalist allies.
