Confederate Veterans Evil—Malcolm X Good

Mayor Broome, Baton Rouge, Louisiana

The slander against Southerners continues all across the South. In Baton Rouge, Louisiana the mayor of Louisiana's capitol city recently (May 19, 2017) declared Malcolm X Day. Hardly anyone took notice. In an era in which men who honorably served their country, struggled against great odds, and many giving their lives to protect their homes and family from a vicious invader—such men are proclaimed as being evil while a Black supremacist who advocated violence against white people is honored.

Mayor Broome was born in Chicago and educated at the University of Wisconsin. Just like New Orleans, there has been a large scale middle-class flight from Baton Rouge. Those left within the city limits tend to vote for the liberal Democrat who promises to tax the middle-class and use the money to pay for “free services” to those who faithfully vote for liberal Democrats. Sooner or later the middle-class must learn that they cannot run forever.

The answer is to organize a new form of political effort to reclaim the South. A South free and prosperous, where Southern pride knows no color line. This new society will require an effort that specializes in irregular political warfare. Doing the same things, we have always done will give us more of the same—if you enjoy Malcolm X Day then keep doing the same things we have always done. But if you want to change the world for the better then read Dixie Rising—Rules for Rebels. Change requires a well thought-out strategic plan implemented by dedicated individuals.

The Ugly American Yankee

At the height of the Cold War a book appeared titled The Ugly American. The term “ugly American” came to be used as an expression for the offensive behavior of Americans abroad. It was used to describe “Americans” in foreign lands who generally conducted themselves in a loud, obnoxious, and arrogant manner. I recall a conversation with a Southern gentleman in 1969 who had just returned from a visit to several European nations. He said that often people would ask where he was from. They would then express surprise when he confessed that he was from the U.S. “But you don’t act like an American,” would be their general response.

Southerners have learned to politely ignore arrogant Yankee visitors who disdainfully admonish their Southern inferiors, “that’s not the way we do it up North!” There is and always has been an innate superiority attitude among “those people.” They unconsciously exhibit a demeaning attitude toward any people or culture that is different from their culture (if you can call their hedonistic, money grubbing society a “culture”). To the world, Americans (in fact Yankees) seem to be on a worldwide mission to make the world into a second-class version of America (actually a second-class version of Yankeedom). As the late Southern historian Forrest McDonald noted Yankees “are always utterly certain and utterly impervious to argument.”

As long as we the people of the South remain “unequally yoked with unbelievers” we will always be associated with not only the arrogant and self-worshipping Yankee but we will also be dragged into his never ending no-win wars, international intrigue, and unsustainable debt necessary to finance no-win wars and international intrigues. We have a duty to make sure the world understands that we the people of the South are Americans but not part of the ugly Yankee’s America.

Art work by Sara Ford

Sara Ford—Southern Artist and Author

A Book Review by Ron Kennedy

It is not often—as in almost never—that I take the time to read a novel. But when Sara Ford sent me a copy of one of her books Grayback; Long Road to Damascus, I was intrigued. Sara is the artist who did the wonderful artwork for the cover of Dixie Rising. She is truly a multi-talented Southern lady.

I was immediately impressed with her understanding of Confederate camp life—something that only a re-enactor would know. Her protagonist, Bertram, is a teenager serving as a drummer boy in the Confederate army. His shooting skill moves him up to the level of sharpshooter, a position he desires as a way to revenge the death of his father and brother who were POWs killed by the Yankees.

In an intriguing twist of fate Bertram is wounded while scouting behind Yankee lines wearing a Union great coat. He is presumed to be a wounded Yankee and taken to the hospital. His wounds leave him (temporarily?) blinded. He ends up recuperating as a wounded Yankee soldier in a distant relative's home in New Hampshire. The author keeps you in suspense as you live Bertram's life wondering if he will find his way back home. It is a well written novel laced with many historical facts. A fun read from Amazon Publishing.

Repopulation—Globalists Strategy to Dominate

A political advisor to former British Prime Minister Tony Blair admitted Globalists were using massive third world immigration as a way to repopulate otherwise “conservative” countries. By flooding countries with new voters who have no historical or blood connection to the invaded country, the Globalists politicians can gain a vast reservoir of loyal voters. Andrew Neather claimed that one of their missions was to radically change the country and “rub the Right’s nose in diversity.”

Politicians in England, just like in the U.S., claim that these hordes of immigrants were needed to do work that locals were not available to do. Politicians would regale the public about the economic benefits that flow from welcoming these diverse populations. Multi-culturalism became a political religion that no one dared to question. Bodies of teenage girls in Manchester, England bear witness to the logic of “our” politicians.

The photo above was taken in Vietnam by one of our brave soldiers—soldiers who were betrayed by the very politicians who sent them to fight in a no-win war. Note the proud display of their nation's flag. The Mayor of New Orleans, LA, would not approve!

Consent of the Governed

Without it there is no Freedom

The “consent of the governed” is the key founding principle of the American Republic. In 1776, it was enshrined in the Joint Declaration of Independence. After declaring that “consent” was necessary in order to maintain a legitimate government the founding fathers then did something even more revolutionary. They formally withdrew their consent for the government that had grown oppressive of the fundamental rights of Americans. The Declaration of Independence is in fact a secession document. In it America's founding fathers established the right of any people to withdraw their consent from any government that violates the rights and liberties of the people. They demonstrated that the right to give or withdraw consent from government is the key to political freedom.

So often we have heard detractors of the South denounce Southern secession because the South was not fighting for freedom—after all, our detractors claim, the South had slaves. Yet, every stripe on the current U.S.A. flag represents a former slave holding sovereign state, and the New England states were actively engaged in the nefarious slave trade. Yet, the secession of the thirteen colonies from the British government is not denounced.

We the people of the South legally withdrew our consent from the Federal government in 1861. The Federal Empire illegally invaded a democratically elected, sovereign nation, the Confederate States of America. The South was pillaged, occupied and impoverished by an illegal act of the United States. During Reconstruction, the United States forced the South to accept new Federal and state Constitutions. Our consent was never freely given. Any government established without the free and unfettered consent of the people is an illegitimate government.

Docile submission to the Federal Empire does not equal vindication!

The Empire's Deep State Strikes

At Podunk, USA

In a recent column by Breitbart editor Joel Pollak it was noted that the Deep State would not surrender to we the people even though “our” candidate is now president. In his column at <http://www.breitbart.com/big-government/2017/05/17/in-impeachment-talk-washington-establishment-declares-war-on-trump-voters/> Pollak declared that the Democrats have been joined by some Republicans in their campaign to impeach President Trump. He noted that the inhabitants of the swamp were not just attacking Trump but they were attacking everyone who voted for Trump. The inhabitants of the Washington, D.C. swamp believe that they have an almost Divine Right to Rule. This was also pointed out in the earliest addition of Nullification: Why and How. [Free pdf copy available at: http://www.kennedytwins.com/Nullification_Book_2012.pdf] The Ruling Elite in Washington, D.C. have no respect for we the people—as far as they are concerned, we are the ignorant inhabitants of America’s “fly-over” land. The utter disdain “those people” have for us was evident in a recent hearing of the Energy and Commerce Committee. Representative Anna Eshoo, who represents Silicon Valley, referred to middle-class America as “Podunk, USA.” “Those people” who own Lincoln’s Federal Empire will not allow us to regain our freedom without a fight. Pollak quoted Trump advisor Steve Bannon, “If you think they’re going to give you your country back without a fight, you are sadly mistaken.”

It is plain to anyone who understands the workings of our current Federal government that it will take more than a mere election to make a fundamental change in our form of government. Project 2020 is an essential element in the struggle to reclaim America’s constitutionally limited federal government enforced by real states’ rights—inclusive of the rights of state nullification and secession.

Dixie Rising—Rules for Rebels is a procedure manual for making the fundamental change necessary for Freedom!

- How do we motivate the Southern people to join us in the fight for Freedom?
- How do we force party politicians to respect our heritage?
- What is irregular political warfare?
- How do we establish shadow governments in each Southern State?

Time for talk is over—we act or die!

Is It Un-Patriotic for Southerners to Question American Military Intervention?

The above question is difficult to answer for those of us raised during the Cold War. For us it was a battle to defeat atheistic communism; an evil power that was attempting to force its will upon the world. We were raised and educated by the World War II generation for whom patriotism was intricately linked to America's military power. "America! Love it or leave it," was our motto. But is Cold War "patriotism" appropriate today?

Two American Presidents, both former Generals, warned Americans about the dangers associated with a large and influential military. President Washington noted the dangers to individual liberty posed by a large standing army. President Eisenhower warned us about the dangers posed by an ever-enlarging military/industrial complex. Today, the Globalists and neo-cons are always anxious to use our military to protect American "interests." But somehow those "interests" always benefit the Globalists while America's sons and daughters always pay the human cost of such adventures and America's middle-class taxpayers bear the financial cost. Of all people Southerners should be the first to question Federal military intervention disguised as an effort to protect American "interests." Interests such as collecting tariffs in Southern harbors.

In every book written by the Kennedy Twins we have noted the warning given by American patriots from the beginning of the nation—a warning about how special interests can always find an excuse to enlarge its powers while diminishing individual liberty. We have quoted President Thomas Jefferson's warning about a centralized federal government "founded on banking institutions, and moneyed incorporations under the guise and cloak of their favored branches of manufactures, commerce, navigation, riding and ruling over the plundered ploughman and beggared yeomanry." As President Eisenhower described them "a military/industrial complex."

Lincoln used the North's military/industrial complex to wage a war of extermination against the democratically elected, sovereign nation, the Confederate States of America. Historically speaking, the Confederate States of America was the Federal Empire's first captive nation—the beginning of a worldwide empire.

The victorious North (now an empire) used bloody bayonets to force the subjugated Southern people to accept a new Federal Constitution and new state Constitutions. Constitutions established without the free and unfettered consent of the governed are not legitimate constitutions. Therefore, the governments founded on such constitutions are illegitimate. The mere passage of time does not bestow legitimacy upon illegitimate constitutions or the governments based upon illegitimate constitutions. But more such constitutions were soon to follow as the Federal Empire began to exercise its military power outside of North America.

In the late 1880s the Kingdom of Hawaii, which was recognized by the United States, was forcefully reduced to an American protectorate. The Hawaiian King was forced by military pressure from the United States to sign a new Constitution that destroyed the authority of native Hawaiians and turned political power over to American emigrants. The Hawaiian people referred to the new constitution as the "Bayonet Constitution." Queen Liliuokalani described the American intervention thusly: "Although settled among us, and drawing their wealth from our resources, they were alien to us in their customs and ideas respecting government, and desired above all things the extension of their power, and to carry out their own special plans of advancement, and to secure their own personal benefit...This constitution was never in any way ratified, either by the people, or by their representatives, even after violence had procured the king's signature."

The American government had particular interest in establishing a naval base at Pearl Harbor and Ford Island. What harm could possibly follow from such a "bully" adventure? Their excuse was that it was necessary to protect American "interest." The general American (i.e. Yankee) attitude was that if it was good for American commerce, it was good for America. But during that time what was the condition of we the people of the Federal Empire's first captive nation? We were being punished with poverty while our few remaining Southern resources were being exploited by the Empire's crony capitalists. We were struggling under our own set of "Bayonet Constitutions!"

The Federal Empire would use its military to enforce other "Bayonet Constitutions." For example; 1899-1902 in the Philippines after killing over 200,000 freedom fighters who were opposing "Yankee" reconstruction of their nation, the Philippines became an American protectorate; in Cuba 1901 via the Platt Amendment that made Cuba a virtual U.S. protectorate; and, in 1903 when the Federal Empire engineered the secession of Panama from Columbia. Secession is good only if it enriches the Federal Empire and its crony capitalist allies.

Of all people Southerners, as citizens of a captive nation, should be the first to question the veracity of politicians who wish to commit our sons and daughters to military action in foreign nations. Politicians and their Globalist allies will always "cloak" demands for military actions in high-sounding rhetoric about American interests and need for humanitarian actions. Perhaps "our" political leaders have been using our Southern patriotism to gain support for their own special interests.

The same type of U.S. military intervention that exterminated so many black and white Southerners has been used to enlarge the Federal Empire's commercial "interests" worldwide. While it enriched Wall Street elites, it left in its wake a legacy of oppression & poverty.

Antifa—Leftwing Storm Troopers

The Battle of Berkeley took place April 15, 2017. It was similar to the Battle of New Orleans that took place around the same time. The violence in both cases was initiated by groups of leftwing ruffians. These liberal missionaries of “free and open discourse” (leftwing style of course—you may speak only if you agree with the left) are often referred to as Antifa, short for anti-fascist. They originated in Europe and are now well established and accepted by the American left. Far from being against fascism they are experts in using the Nazi techniques of violence and intimidation against anyone who opposes their leftwing ideology. They are in fact America’s leftwing version of Hitler’s Brown Shirts and SA Storm Troopers. What is worse is that the mainline media and politicians refused to expose these arbiters of hatred and violence, and by their silence give their consent to these Antifa thugs.

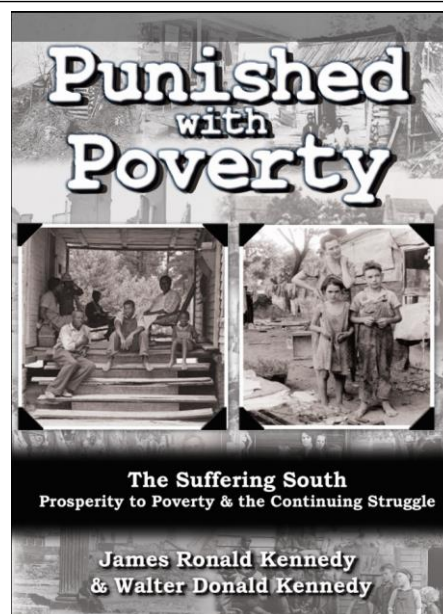

In the Battle of Berkeley their object was to shut down free speech and by relying on the tacit support of the mainline media depict their peaceful, rightwing opponents as the ones responsible for the ensuing violence. A small group of Antifa types, with the support of a “peaceful” leftwing crowd, can shut down and destroy any rightwing peaceful protest. A report in the National Review recently noted these leftwing, violent, thugs and their supporting “peaceful” crowd as having a “symbiotic relationship.” Those responsible for violence break a few heads or otherwise cause damage to their opponents and then retreat into the crowd that closes around the thugs. The leftwing crowd widely cheers on the violent thugs and treats them as heroes. This of course encourages the thugs and enrages the rightwing protestors. At some point the peaceful, rightwing protestors who have been the targets of the leftwing thugs will respond with physical violence. At that point, the mainline media will capture the rightwing response and report it as an “Alt-right” attack against peaceful counter protestors. Battle of Berkeley data:

<https://www.conservativereview.com/articles/what-is-antifa-and-why-are-the-media-so-reluctant-to-expose-it>

The simple fact facing us is that they are organized but we are not. A shadow government could push through legislation that would make the crowd equally responsible for the crimes committed by these thugs. Once the police order the crowd to disperse anyone remaining will be treated as a co-conspirator and arrested. We should not seek to mimic the left via violent response but we could use our shadow government to respond. Our job is first to organize a shadow government—mark your calendar for October 28, 2017, Baton Rouge, LA.

The War did not end slavery—all Southerners were punished with poverty.

They fought because the Northern majority was attempting to make political, economic, and social slaves out of the Southern minority. The struggle continues—Freedom in 2020!
